Subject: Meeting

Dear Mr. Levinstein,

It was a pleasure meeting you this past Sunday at the Waltham Small Business Seminar and having the chance to talk in a relaxed atmosphere. You have a wonderful business and I know that many have admired your excellent food and service!

As a community, I believe that we should all work together to solve a problem that has come to our attention and that has damaged everyone's business.

Lately, many business owners have reported a lot more petty 小規模 street crime during the day. Much of it is the result of young kids who are bored, but customers are worried and it makes them nervous about coming to the area. We cannot afford customers staying away from our community - we need more!

I have personally contacted the police and the local council 議會 several times about this problem. However, no action has been taken. When it is only one person calling, the problem will not be taken seriously. This needs to come from all of us, to show that there are many people who are noticing this problem and concerned.

I plan to hold a meeting with you and several other local business owners this weekend to talk about our cooperation in this problem. I have a few ideas on what we could do, and I am sure you and others will have many to offer as well.

I suggest we meet at Rowe's Café on Saturday at 3 p.m. to toss around some ideas. I will call you on Thursday to see if this is convenient.

I look forward to seeing you again.

Sincerely,

John Keller

Questions 181-185 refer to the following article and chart.

Whereas most PC games tend to sell very poorly, a scarce few has been able to dominate the charts for months, if not years. This disturbing trend has forced developers and marketing specialists to ask themselves whether their products lack a mainstream appeal, or whether their marketing approaches should be reconsidered.

According to industry analyst Rick Shaw, the biggest factor is the availability of demos or trial versions of software where potential buyers get to play and test out the product before deciding whether they'd like to purchase the game.

In addition, Daniel Weaver, the lead designer behind phenomenal 驚人的 titles such as Game of Life and Home Improvement suggests that familiarity is another issue. Weaver believes that your average shopper would be more prone to buy a game about everyday life rather than something they can only imagine.

Tim Meyer, head of the marketing division at FE Games, implies that these factors might not be as important as the fact that some PC games tend to require a super-powerful computer to run. While gamers of console 操縱臺 games simply purchase a game, plug it in, and everything's set, PC gamers have to manually install the game, adjust their computer settings, and more often than not, have the necessary hardware to run these products. This is all-too confusing for the general consumer. Therefore, Meyer points out to the fact that PC games aren't selling poorly; it's that there are far fewer PC gamers in the market to produce megahits.大量暢銷產品

Dear Sir/Madam:

After attending the first class on November 16, I am greatly disappointed with the quality of your Business Negotiations course. First of all, the subject matter discussed did not correspond to the course agenda you mentioned. Our outline indicates that the first class will focus on different business settings and goals. Additionally, my classmates and I feel that the instructor's knowledge was severely lacking, as many of our questions were left unanswered, and it was obvious that the instructor was unable to address some of the technical questions from the class.

I stayed after class and discussed this matter with the instructor, and sadly, she admitted that some of our questions were beyond her experience. I have also contacted some members of the class, and the majority of them felt the same way.

Given the huge discrepancy 不符、差異 between your course advertisement and the actual class sessions, I would like to request a full refund of our registration fee and tuition. Should you need to speak to me in person, please contact me at 300-428-2810.

Sincerely,

Ajith, Great Curry and Terrible Service

BY Kristine Santos

The old Ajith Restaurant is unequivocally 明確的 disappointing. Just a few blocks from my apartment, it is a little neighborhood joint, which I'd never visited until last weekend. My impression of the place is that it's mainly known for serving exquisite 精緻的 Indian curries. Having heard all this, I thought I'd pay the place a quick visit on Saturday night, just to see what all the buzz 消息 was about.

I figured since their curries are quite renowned, I'd be better off getting the curry special. Now, the food was impressive. Ajith features five 'grades' of spiciness, from the mild to the insane. The meat was tender and the curry sauce was superb. The salad was served with a curious white sauce that seemed to blend mayo with mustard and honey, but I can't really make out the ingredients.

Now, the only thing that really sticks out 突出 in my head is the service, which was simply non-existent. I had to wait for twenty minutes for a glass of water, and it was only after pestering 糾纏 the same waiter nearly five times. And no, he wasn't busy. Only two tables were occupied, and he stood there with a blank stare for the whole time.

If you are only heading there for their special without a care for service, then it should be a fair choice. However, if you aren't too keen on being treated like a plague 瘟疫 victim, look elsewhere.
